Hearing Us Out: Voices from the Gay and Lesbian Community Roger Sutton

A collection of 15 first person interviews profiling how ordinary people from priests to students have come to terms with their sexuality within their own communities. The book helps straight readers understand that gay people are just like them in many ways but that they also have a culture and community of their own. It also shows gay youths, many of whom may be confused and in search of further information, that being gay doesn't need to mean isolated and lonely, that there is a future.
