Milton's Buttons Chelsea McKnight

Young Milton has a social and learning disability but just like anyone else, he has an interest and a hobby - he enjoys collecting buttons! Milton never shares his amazing button collection with anyone at school because he is not comfortable interacting with others. Joan, a kind classmate, decides to reach out to Milton and introduces him to her friends. Milton's new friends show him that his buttons can be used to make remarkable creations. Joan's decision to include Milton encourages others to do the same and help give Milton a new level of comfort when socializing. This story is intended to highlight the importance of social inclusion for the developmental well-being of all children.
