Excerpt from The Rock of the Marne a Chronological Story of the 38th Regiment, U. S Infantry

When two Divisions of German shock troops pile up on a regiment of American fighting men, one does not need to be gifted in imagination to see war in all its ramifications and vicissitudes.

I admit that to those of us who participated the picture as a whole is blurred by proximity while spots are multicolored and accentuated into sheets of concentrated lightning.

The historian of the future will view the battle from afar and do much better, particularly as he will not be hampered by individual facts. Therefore we shall tell you the story and not the history of the 38th's recent unpleasantness.

The scene is laid in that erstwhile heavenly little valley of the Surmelin which finds its resting place on the banks of the River Marne. The semi-mountainous ridges that flank this little valley are wooded with what the French call trees; they are tangled with shrubs and second growths that make for ideal machine gun nests.

Down in the bosom of the valley meanders the Surmelin river, so called we presume because the French do not know our word "creek." It is a heavily foliaged creek; its value we first recognized in its production of trout through the agency of the festive "OF" grenade tossed into its tiny pools.

This valley is a series of golden wheat fields and garden patches.
